

ABSTRACT

An improved dispensing device for liquids held in enclosed containers. The dispensing device attaches to the container opening normally used for pouring the liquid. Once attached, the dispensing device first acts like a siphon, then can be switched to operate like a standard pouring spout in order to completely empty the container of all liquid without removing the dispensing device.